draw a better future together
The COVID-19 pandemic has been a challenging period for many, including for working parents, who have often had to support their children’s educational and social needs from home. Children have felt the impact of the pandemic, too, and at times have had their worlds turned upside down.

As a token of gratitude to our colleagues and their children, UN Geneva’s Director-General and the Perception Change Project presented a number of children with an exclusive Sustainable Development Goals-branded Caran d’Ache box of crayons. To be eligible, children of UN staff in Geneva were invited to submit a freehand drawing on the theme of “A better future together”. This topic echoed the future-focused themes of the United Nations 75th anniversary activities the previous year.

The drawings submitted by children are displayed here.
